March 15, 1962 - Thursday

I had a haircut this morning. Next I received a visit from Major General William M. Breckinridge, who is inspecting some of his special Army installations abroad.

The new Norwegian Ambassador, Arne Skaug, called on me. He was born in 1906, is a graduate of the University of Oslo, in economics, and since, has been in his country's Civil Service. He had a long tour of duty in the United States, was Ambassador to NATO, has been a member of the Cabinet, and is considered an accomplished economist. He told me that he would lead the negotiations with the European Economic Community in connection with Norway's application to join the Common Market.
